Stacey became disabled at a critical point, she hadn't yet established friendships that would enrich her life, her family dynamic dysfunctional and very little career aspirations.

Returning to education was intrinsic to not only her education and career aspirations but her personal and social development.

Stacey never thought that she would attend University, she applied because the majority of her friendship group were going to University. It wasn't until the day she qualified as a Psychologist that she entertained the possibility of a career.

Stacey was met with multiple challenges including professionals paid to support her on her path assuming that she couldn't contribute. Stacey used this as a driving force to exceed expectations and break down barriers to work in a sector she is incredibly passionate about.

Stacey is a skilled and experienced Psychologist who travels around Europe informing policy, developing new initiatives and exchanging inspiring practices within Social Inclusion.

Stacey has extensive experience within criminal justice, education, mental health and enterprise.

Prior to being employed, Stacey due to her disability has never travelled, didn't even have a passport but 10 years on she has visited almost every part of Europe more than 5 times.

Travelling has become her passion and her hobby, learning about other cultures, experiencing local cuisine and meeting local people has provided her with a far more interesting story to tell.
